XXIV. THE HEFTIS

[pg. 144-145]

"On the 16th of November in 1634," as the baptism book of that place reported, the Elm commune "elected new leaders: 1. Church Steward: Mr. Kaspar Ellmer, of the council, instead of Hans Ulrich Ellmer. 2. Charity Official: Heinrich Elmer, beyond the brook^a, instead of Jacob Gyger. 3. Tagwen^b Official; Samuel Höffti, instead of Jochum Sollman."

Samuel Höffti, who was the newly appointed Tagwen official (president and administrator), was the one who transplanted the Hefti family from Hätzingen to Elm. Married to an Anna Speich, he had brought a first child, Margretha, to baptism in the Elm church in 1632.¹ The godparents which were named on this occasion (Magdalena Ernin from Zürich and Mr. Heinrich Erni, canon [of the Zürich Cathedral] and Sacred Scriptures theology professor) create the impression that Samuel Höffti belonged to a prominent family. Furthermore, that may have also recommended him to the Elmers for his promotion to Tagwen official. Obviously, he had also previously purchased the Elm Tagwen right.

In 1742, Elm elected a Niklaus Hefti as its representative on the council. In the 1876 cantonal tax roll, the Heftis from Elm are reported on with 8 taxpayers and a property of 27,000 Fr. On the other hand, they have not forgotten their origin from the Great [Linth river] Valley, but, from time to time, renewed their Tagwen right in Hätzingen.

Besides in Elm, the Heftis, in 1876, were represented in Luchsingen with 79 head-taxpayers, in Hätzingen with 69, in Schwanden with 43, in Ennenda with 33, in Haslen with 22, in a Flurname - field name. People with identical names were differentiated by adding their occupation or a descriptive term for the area where they lived [SW]

b Tagwen - an ancient Glarner term, from at least the 6th century A.D., which is still used today in Canton Glarus to denote the commune of the citizens, i.e. those who have inherited or purchased the Tagwen rights (this may only partially coincide with the political commune). It is derived from Tage Wann, meaning the work someone could perform in one day in the commonly-held fields, pastures and forests. Over the years the number of Tagwen in the canton has varied considerably, with the present-day number being 29. Also its duties have changed – from jointly working on and enjoying the benefits of its common property, to administering all the commune's public interests, to (today) administering and enjoying the benefits of its common property. [SW]

1 In 1634, a second little daughter, Elsbeth, followed, and, in 1637, a family heir, Samuel.

Leuggelbach with 21, in Glarus with 11, and in Diesbach with 7; furthermore, 18 additional Heftis were found in 10 other communes.

With 311 head-taxpayers, they were the most numerous family of the canton. (As the second, the Zweifelers followed with 276 head-taxpayers, and as the third, the Jennis with 250.) However, I have already given a detailed account of the Hefti family in No. 15 of the "Historical Yearbook", pg. 75-90 (also a shorter addendum in No. 26, pg. 106-108). For this reason, I mention here merely that, according to J. J. Kubli-Müller's information, the A m d e n [Canton St. Gallen] anniversary book for the 15th and the beginning of the 16th centuries shows various Heftis as citizens and citizenesses of Amden; thus a Hans Hefti, who was married, in his first marriage, to Margreth Büsser, and, in his second marriage, to Agatha Roner; in addition, a Jakob Hefti, who was married to Barbara Thoma, whose son, Jakob, was married to Brigitta Krämerin and, in his second marriage, to Margr. Schorer; a sergeant-at-arms, Hans Hefti; and a sergeant-at-arms, Michael Hefti. From Amden, then, members of the Hefti family, as followers of the "new faith", might have come to Hätzingen², where we met them in 1542, as a result of the Reformation, as the reaction set in [against the "new faith"] in the Gaster [the Canton St. Gallen district where Amden is located, which remained Catholic] after the second Kappeler war [1531].

On the other hand, an Italian document, which has already been offered for purchase for 40 years, which traces the history of the Heftis back to the time of Kaiser Friedrich Barbarossa [Holy Roman Emperor, 1152-1190] and to Hungary, and allocates high military positions to them, may be considered as a fabrication, for speculative purposes.

2 From Hätzingen, the Hefti family also went to Norway in the 18th century, through Johannes Hefti (born in 1730, died in 1801), who, at first, carried on a timber trade to the Netherlands from Hätzingen, but then emigrated to Norway and there, with his sons, Thomas, Fridolin and Heinrich, established a timber business, which later affiliated itself with a banking business. Descendants of this Hefti still live today in Christiania. They have long since become Norwegians; nonetheless, they have not completely forgotten their Hätzingen origins (one of them requested a Hefti family tree from me about 30 years ago, which request I, however, could not satisfy at the time because of other work).
